2. Currencies

The foreign exchange (FX) market is the largest and the most liquid market in the world, with average daily trading volume of about $4 trillion [1]. As a fully decentralised market place, with no actual physical location, it operates over-the-counter (OTC) via a network of banks, financial institutions, hedge funds, investment management firms, broker and dealers. This structure creates huge liquidity and facilitates trading 24h hours a day (with minor gaps on weekends [2]), meaning exchange rates can change virtually at any time, reacting to the latest market developments. This in turn means that you do not have to wait for an exchange to open in order to trade.

[1] As of 2010, source Bank for International Settlements

[2] The FX trading day starts in the Western Pacific, moves through New Zealand and Australia, followed by Tokyo, Hong Kong, Singapore, through to Middle East; later markets open in Europe and then in the US. Whilst the trading comes to an end in the US, the Asia-Pacific area readies itself for the next business day.

6. Dividends

We pass on 100% of the announced dividend net of withholding tax, if any.

For long positions in UK companies, you will receive 100% of the announced dividend declared by the UK Company. For non UK companies, the dividend may be subject to withholding tax. For example, if you have a position in a US stock, the announced dividend is subject to 30% withholding tax. Being a UK domiciled firm, we claim a 15% tax benefit, which we pass on to you and therefore, you will be credited 85% of the announced dividend rather than 70%.
